It's difficult to separate fact from urban legend here, since having detailed knowledge of sadistic Australian child pornographer Peter Scully's videos would basically be an admission of committing a crime.

What is clear is that "Daisy's Destruction" (sometimes called "The Destruction of Daisy") are extreme and brutal videos, available only in the darkest corners of the deep web, featuring children as young as two years old being tortured, assaulted, and in some cases, murdered by Scully and various accomplices.

If you are so inclined, you can find descriptions of these videos around the web. But Scully is now in prison and his utterly sickening videos are now the property of the FBI, so it's safe to assume most of the finer details still available are mere rumor. Still, the very fact these videos exist in the first place is enough to churn your stomach.

Tor is free software for enabling anonymous communication. The name is derived from an acronym for the original software project name "The Onion Router".

- directs Internet traffic through a free, worldwide, volunteer overlay network consisting of more than seven thousand relays[8] to conceal a user's location and usage from anyone conducting network surveillance or traffic analysis. Using Tor makes it more difficult to trace Internet activity to the user: this includes "visits to Web sites, online posts, instant messages, and other communication forms". The core principle of Tor, "onion routing", was developed in the mid-1990s by United States Naval Research Laboratory employees, mathematician Paul Syverson, and computer scientists Michael G.

While sales of guns and other weapons do take place in certain dark web markets, it isn't as common as most people think. That's mostly because weapons are tricky to send via snail mail (as opposed to drugs, which can be easily hidden when shipped in small quantities), according to Fast Company. Moreover, should you attempt to purchase a firearm via a dark web market, you might find yourself in trouble with the law, as it is highly possible that many sellers are undercover FBI or DEA agents.

Still, the mere idea of illegal gun sales - particularly to those who should absolutely not own guns - is terrifying.

The screenshot shows the WallST Market website interface. At the top, there is a navigation bar with the site logo and links for Home, User-CP, FAQ, Forum, Support, Refrally, and Log Out. A search bar is located on the left side of the main content area. Below the search bar, there is a sidebar with various categories and their respective item counts: Drugs (120), Counterfeits (13), Jewelry & Gold (0), Carding Ware (6), Services (7), Software & Malware (16), Security & Hosting (4), Fraud (143), Digital goods (46), and Guides & Tutorials (70). The main content area is titled "Featured Listings" and displays three listings in a grid. The first listing is for "Bubba Kush BC Bud AAAA+" by a user named "Greensurfer" (Level 1, Trusted), priced at $4.50/Gram. The second listing is for "HQ Fullinfo DE Random CC Classic" by "DrPayBack" (Level 5), priced at 7,000€/Piece. The third listing is for "HQ PYPALS DE FULLINFO UA+IP 2h REPLACE!! 100 FOR 50€" by "Alice1337" (Level 5), priced at 0,45€/Piece. Each listing includes a "Go to Offer" button. Below the featured listings, there are partial views of other listings, including one for "HQ DE PayPal Fullinfo" and another for "100% VALID HQ".

Doxing

8Chan's Baphomet Subboard

Doxing is a process of temporarily making certain individuals' personal information (home address, phone number, email, etc.) available in order to harass them.

In August 2014, the harassment campaign targeted several women in the video game industry; notably game developers Zoë Quinn and Brianna Wu, as well as feminist media critic Anita Sarkeesian. After Eron Gjoni, Quinn's former boyfriend, wrote a disparaging blog post about her, #gamergate hashtag users falsely accused Quinn of an unethical relationship with journalist Nathan Grayson. Harassment campaigns against Quinn and others included doxing, threats of rape, and death threats.

Pink Meth

Slide 18

DC1

Fortunately, Pink Meth is a website that was hosted on the dark net, until it was seized by the FBI in 2014. Despite the name, the site had nothing to do with drugs. Rather, Pink Meth was a market mainly for men, whereby they could sell nude photos of their exes for a hefty sum. Pink Meth then posted these photos, alongside the women's names, home addresses, phone numbers, and any other information the operators could dig up. Then, a ransom on the content was delivered to the victim - pay up to have the photo removed, or let the whole of the dark web have access to your personal information, including your nude photo

Violent Desires

Armin Meiwes is a German computer repair technician who achieved international notoriety for killing and eating a voluntary victim whom he had found via the Internet.

Because of his acts, Meiwes is also known as the Rotenburg Cannibal or Der Metzgermeister (The Master Butcher).

Slide 19

DC1

The name of this forum, which is purported to still exist as of 2016, pretty much describes what you might find there: people sharing their most gruesome and brutal desires. Perhaps the most infamous example is a post written by an anonymous doctor who offered to "manufacture" living child sex dolls through a combination of human torture, experimentation, and body modification.

While it is likely that Violent Desires is mostly just fantasy, the Armin Miewes cannibalism case - where a derange man killed and ate a voluntary victim he found online - arose from a "clearnet" (regular, everyday) Internet forum called The Cannibal Cafe, where users shared their sexual "appetites" with one another. It just goes to show that in an anonymous place, anything can happen.

Human Trafficking

Slide 20

DC1

Could you purchase a human being on the deep web? Some advertise just this service, as Vice Motherboard writer Joseph Cox reported in July 2015. He describes interactions over email with a group called Black Death, who had for sale a woman named "Nicole," with a starting bid of $150,000. After numerous covert attempts to see live web cam footage of Nicole and arrange a deal, Black Death and their site disappeared.

As it turns out, Black Death was likely a scam operation, as the images of Nicole were apparently screen shots from a porno movie. This more or less confirmed suspicions of an unnamed tactical advisor from the National Crime Agency's UK Human Trafficking Centre (UKHTC), who noted that genuine human trafficking sites are not as glossy as the images Cox discovered.

This confirms that backdoor sales of living human beings does indeed happen, but anything an average person—or even a journalist, for that matter—stumble upon in their browsing of the dark web is likely fake, a means of taking your money and running - which, if you were seriously hoping to buy a person online, serves you right

On the surface, fake passport and documentation "factories" seem fairly innocuous compared to things like animal cruelty and child pornography, but when one considers that these forged papers could be purchased by ISIS and other terrorist organizations in order to enter countries with tightened border security—namely, the U.S. and the U.K.—the notion becomes rather alarming.

But is this actually happening? In February 2017, a Daily Beast article reported on a document factory ran by the Camorra, a Neopolitan mafia, who advertised their services on a website that was only accessible via the deep web. These passports are reportedly so sophisticated they easily pass as the real thing. There were also connections between this "company" and a string of illegal arms deals carried out by known terrorist networks.

Despite all this, it isn't actually clear whether or not these fake passports were used to carry terrorists over borders they might not otherwise cross, so whether this is indeed an illegal service accessible via the deep web remains to be seen.

Hitmen

Slide 23

DC1

There are numerous sites and organizations accessible via the deep web that claim to offer contract-killer services. Of course, as many Reddit users theorize (likely correctly), these services are probably sting operations for the FBI.

Moreover, even if these organizations are "legit" (in the sense they are not fronts for law enforcement agencies), there is still no guarantee they are, indeed, contract killer services. Because the deep web's major currency is bitcoin, which is essentially non-refundable, your attempts to off someone may result in plain and simple robbery.

Still, the only way to find out for sure is to actually engage these services, which would either result in you being arrested, or having someone you know killed for a large sum of money...

It isn't a stretch to say there is "more" malware floating around the dark web than in the everyday web, again, because of the dark web's anonymity. Nefarious individuals using the Cryptolocker, for instance (a malware that effectively holds your local files "ransom," returnable to you only for a fee) and the equally troubling SkyNet, rely on this anonymity to make it difficult for law enforcement agencies to trace their whereabouts.

That being said, the idea that your computer and data are less safe on the dark web than on the regular web is a false one. You basically have to implement the same amount of precaution as you normally would - be extremely careful about what sites you visit and don't download anything unless you're absolutely sure it's safe to do so. Just know that "going down the rabbit hole," so to speak, generally isn't as good an idea in the dark web as it is on the visible Internet.

Swatting

Slide 26

DC1

On March 14th, online security journalist Brian Krebs was cleaning his Virginia home in preparation for a small dinner party when he noticed some plastic tape stuck under his front door, left over from when he'd had to secure an extension cord. Pulling up the tape, he opened the front door — and suddenly heard a yell. "Don't move!" the voice said. "Put your hands in the air!" There were around 10 to 12 police officers surrounding his driveway, guns drawn.

Fortunately, Krebs realized immediately what had happened. He had actually warned the police months before about the possibility of a fake emergency call designed to bring a SWAT team to his house, an increasingly popular prank among the young hackers he writes about. Still, he was shaken.
